

Press Release

The inclusion of Wallonia's major mining sites on the World Heritage List

APPENDIX

GRAND-HORNU

A few kilometres from Mons, Grand-Hornu, witness to the audacity and inventiveness of the industrialists of the time, is one of the most handsome neoclassical industrial heritage locations in Europe. The site was established in 1810 by the audacious captain of industry Henri De Gorge during the emerging industrial revolution. The housing district, which counts over 400 houses, is one of the oldest in the country. It surrounds the industrial site, boxing it in and punctuating the landscape. After being one of the jewels of Belgian industry, today Grand-Hornu is one of the most emblematic cultural centres in Belgium. At the site, the non-profit Grand-Hornu Images explores the relationships between art and industry through design, architecture and the applied arts, while the Museum of Contemporary Arts (the MAC's) of the Federation Wallonia-Brussels presents international contemporary creativity in all its aspects.

BOIS-DU-LUC

The Bois-du-Luc mining site, located in the heart of the Centre's industrial valley, between the Borinage and the Charleroi valley, belongs to a company that was founded in 1685, and constitutes one of the oldest examples of capitalist structure in continental Europe. The site eloquently reflects the achievement of an ideology, a utilitarian and catholic paternalism that was so characteristic of the industrial era. Opposite the Saint Emmanuel pit opened in 1846, a company town was built which from 1853 on would be the nucleus of an exceptional workers' village. In addition to a housing district, this village includes a series of shared amenities such as schools, a hospice, a hospital, a church, a park, a grocery store and a community hall which boasts a wide range of leisure facilities and services that have been gradually expanded over the years. Together, all these facilities form a microcosm in which places of work and life intertwine. The presence of the Director's villa, positioned opposite the housing district and close to the workshops in order to afford the Director a good overview of the various activities, illustrates the social relationships that shaped European societies in the 19th and 20th centuries.

THE BOIS DU CAZIER

Since 2002, the Bois du Cazier colliery site in Marcinelle has been a memorial site dedicated to the 262 victims of the terrible accident on 8 August 1956, who lost their lives as a result of asphyxia. Thanks to the work done to raise awareness about the disaster and also to the commemorations that are held each year, the site has become a symbol of remembrance, of labour and of immigrant workers. A general increase in awareness of the disaster formed the basis for a profound reappraisal both in terms of employment and society as a whole. In addition to the areas dedicated to the tragedy, the presence of the Museum of Industry and the Glass Museum on the site reinforces the Bois du Cazier's status as a showcase for human expertise, for its successes but also for its tribulations. Its new ambition is also to evolve into a site to increase awareness and develop active citizenship on themes such as safety at work and migration.

BLEGNY-MINE

Located between Liège and Visé, Blegny-Mine is a very old mining site which was also the last one to remain in operation, as production only ended here at the beginning of the 1980s. Blegny-Mine is the only one of the four sites not to have been dismantled and abandoned and conserves two pieces of evidence of Liège's mining activities from very different periods: the Marie pit, certain rooms of which date back to the mid-19th century and the No. 1 pit, the oldest of which sections date back to 1942. Complete with its top landing equipment, winch, sorting and washing equipment, this pit is still used to take visitors down to the mine's underground galleries (30 and 60 metres underground). Often visitors to the mine are still guided by former miners or by professional guides trained by the latter, which adds a very important human aspect to the technical discovery.
